HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
TALLAHASSEE

Dear Friend:

This booklet is intended to help you know more about the House of Representatives, a co-partner in the legislative progress of our State.

Public understanding of the functioning of the House of Representatives, and, indeed, of all of the other branches of our State, is essential to the continuing success of our democracy.

Members of the House of Representatives pride themselves on being the arm of the State government most responsive to the will of the people.

It is my hope that you will find this booklet useful, and that you may wish to pass it along to others for a sharing of the information it contains.

Very sincerely,

Terrell Sessums

THE LANGUAGE OF LAWMAKING

Each profession, trade, occupation and even sport has its own language. Lawmaking does, too.

If you went to court, you would not be at all surprised to hear the judge and the lawyers using words which are strange to you. And if you were watching a football game for the first time, you surely would be puzzled over the meaning of some of the action on the field.

As a visitor in the gallery of the House of Representatives, you should not be dismayed to hear words and phrases which are not immediately meaningful to you. Lawmaking is a process which moves according to timeless ritual much as does the administration of justice in the courts. Lawmaking possesses the same appeal to many spectators as the clash of athletic teams.

Many people get more intensely interested in lawmaking than they do in sports or other recreation. As Governor Fuller Warren once said, the key word to the reason for this greater interest is significance.

"Yesterday's bridge game is forgotten today, or tomorrow at the latest," observed Governor Warren. "Yesterday's baseball game is only a topic of conversation today and the same thing holds true of a horse race or a golf match. None of these events affect those who do not actually participate in them, except to give the non-participants something to talk about . . . But government is a different matter."

A debate in the House of Representatives may have a great effect on the personal lives of every one of us.

There is a saying that "you can't know the players without a program." This Guide is intended to help you know what's going on here. You will not, to be sure, know everything about the legislative process after you have read this Guide. But you should be sufficiently informed to watch the proceedings more knowledgeably and, therefore, more enjoyably.

NOW, THE FIRST WORD

Florida's Legislature was ranked 1st in the nation for independence after a 14-month study was completed in 1971 by the nonpartisan, privately-funded Citizens Conference on State Legislatures.

The overall basis for rating by the Conference was the degree to which legislatures "function effectively, account to the public for their actions, gather and use information, avoid undue influence and represent the interest of their people."

"Independence," the category in which Florida stood 1st, was measured by the Conference in these terms:

independence of the legislative from state's executive branch, capability for legislative review and audit of administrative agencies, excellence of legislative procedures, regulation of special-interest groups and lobbyists, control of conflicts of interest, frequency and duration of sessions, and compensation of members.

Florida's Legislature also was ranked among the top eight in three of four other categories. These categories were "functional," for utilization of its time, office space, number of committees, and procedures; "accountable," for adequacy of information necessary for lawmaking, public access to voting records and actual deliberations, and leadership selection and constraints; and "informed," for staff resources and amount of time devoted to legislative process.

Independence truly is the key word describing the Florida House of Representatives in the changing process of lawmaking which commenced in 1966 with the writing of the legislative organization amendment into the State Constitution by the voting public. This amendment directed the Legislature to meet in Special Session shortly after the November election for the sole purpose of selecting officers so business could be transacted thereafter instead of waiting, as before, until the convening of the Regular Session in April.

This two-sentence amendment unshackled the Legislature from the chains of a regular session of 60-consecutive days every two years (in reality, 44 working days) and tiny housekeeping staff to a fully-functioning, year-round existence. The Legislature for the first time became an equal of the Executive and Judicial Departments in deed as it always had been in theory.

The significant difference between the old and the new Legislature is the fact that the old biennial Legislature was forced to rely almost entirely upon the volunteered knowledge and expertise of others whose vision often was limited by their special interests as, for example, spokesmen for agencies in the Executive Department.

There simply wasn't time enough, staff enough, and equipment enough for the Legislature to develop judgments of its own. Then, as now, the Legislature passed the laws. But now the new annual Legislature possesses the creative ability to have the first word as well as the last word.

WHO IS YOUR REPRESENTATIVE?

The typical Member of the present House of Representatives at the time of the General Election in 1972 was 42 years old. The senior Member then was 68 and the junior Member was 26. The typical Member likely was born in August, with 15 having that as their birth month. September and November are the runners-up with 13 each.

The typical Member is a native Floridian, 55 having been born here. New York was the place of birth for 11; Georgia, 7; Illinois, 5; Ohio, Pennsylvania, and Tennessee, 4 each; Alabama, Connecticut, Michigan and Texas, 3 each; Indiana, Kentucky, Maryland, New Jersey and North Carolina, 2 each, and Hawaii, Iowa, Massachusetts, Nebraska, Oklahoma, Rhode Island, Virginia and West Virginia, 1 each.

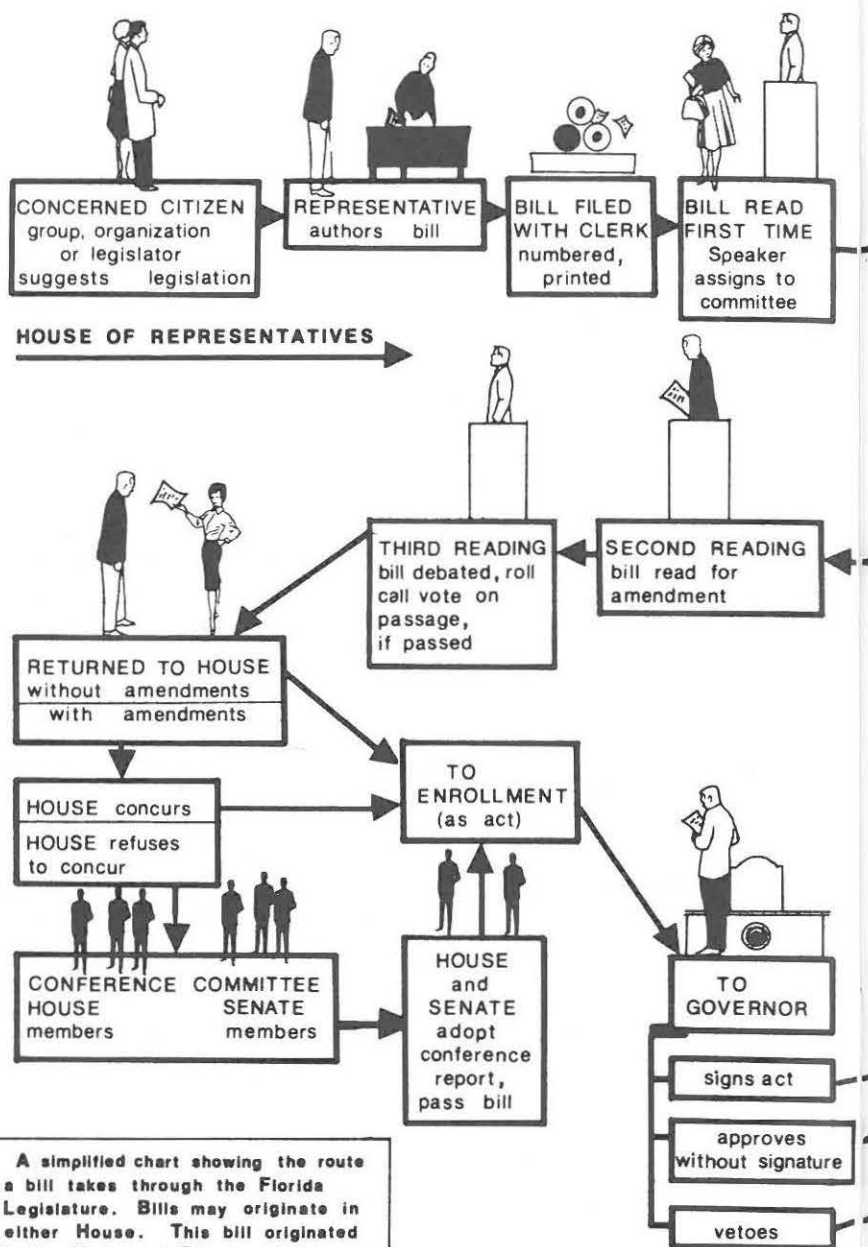

The typical Member attended an institution of higher learning, the Members having been enrolled at 81 different universities and colleges, with the University of Florida the leader with 47 and the University of Miami next with 11. Fifty-seven of the Members received advanced degrees, with the University of Florida again the leader with 22, and the University of Miami and Stetson University tied for runner-up with 7.

The typical Member is married (109 of the 120) and has two children (35) although only a slightly fewer number (31) have three. Of the 120 Members, all but 10 profess some religious affiliation. The top faiths numerically are: Baptist, 24; Catholic, 18; Methodist, 17; Episcopal, 14; Presbyterian, 13; Lutheran, 9, and Jewish, 7.

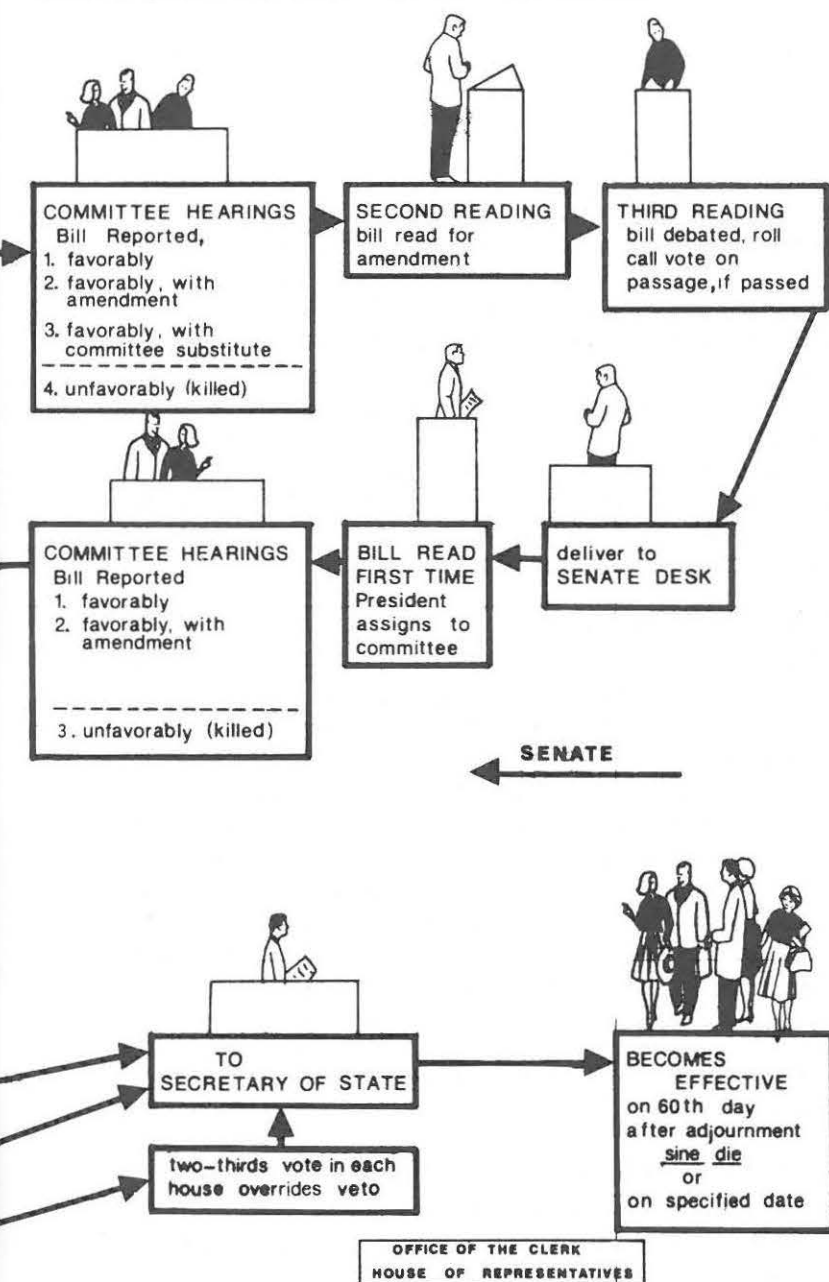

The Florida House retains its identification as a "citizen" body in the sense that virtually all of its Members are active in occupations and professions in addition to lawmaking.

As might be expected in a lawmaking body, there are more lawyers — 46 — than representatives of any other profession or occupation. Far behind are Members from the second largest profession, insurance, with 14. Next, six Members each are engaged in public relations or real estate.

This does not profess to be a complete roll call of the professions and occupations whose practitioners serve in the present House but there is an architect, a banker, a city detective, two teachers, two principals, two funeral directors, an entomologist, an electrical contractor, a pharmacist, a farm and garden supplier, three cattlemen, five citrus growers, three physicians, a newspaper columnist, three general contractors, an auto parts distributor, five farmers, a television newscaster, a restaurateur, a heating-and-air-conditioning contractor, a marketing executive, and a mortgage loan broker. There are few fields of human endeavor in which some Member does not possess expertise.

The typical Member belongs to a fraternal, civic, or benevolent organization, and likely to organizations in all three categories. The typical Member (92) had some form of military service. The typical Member (79) held some other public office before coming to the House. Public service is a tradition in many House families, with fathers, grandfathers, great grandfathers, brothers, uncles and cousins having held offices including the Governorship of Florida.

WHY DO MEMBERS RUN?

Why did each of the 120 Members run for election to the House? The pay? Perhaps in some cases. But the $12,000 base pay for most may mean a loss of income. As Albert J. Abrams of the New York Senate, the past Chairman of the National Legislative Conference, once wrote, the motivating factors include the prestige, the excitement, the challenge of making decisions affecting millions of people and billions of dollars, the opportunity for advancement. One Member of the present House confided that he ran because he believed he had been denied an adequate hearing by a legislative committee on a public-service program about which he felt deeply. He thought he could gain a more receptive audience as an insider. Few Members ran with the thought of making a career of service in the House (66 of the present 120 Members are serving their first or second two-year term) although there are Members who have served up to the 12 consecutive terms of the Dean of the House, former Speaker Ralph Turlington of Gainesville.

THE JOB OF A REPRESENTATIVE

The job of a Representative is not just to pass laws although the typical Member will be called upon to record a vote some 3,800 times during a term.

Again to paraphrase Albert Abrams and keeping in mind that the "he" includes six female Members of the Florida House, the typical Representative speaks directly for the basic 56,591 persons in his District yet indirectly for all the people of Florida since a Representative is a State officer rather than a local officer.

"He must act as a check on the Executive Department," observed Abrams. "He must set priorities of public action. He must determine the allocation of funds between the private and the public sector. And within the public sector, the legislators must determine how much shall go for education, for housing, for economic development, for health, for welfare, etc. He rectifies injustices and acts as umpire between opposing forces in society.

"He reads his mail carefully. And he goes a step further; in many cases he polls his constituents as to their views. He reflects public dissent and public standards.

"He keeps an open door to people in trouble. He does favors daily, interceding for people running the gauntlet of an impersonal bureaucracy. Someone's unemployment check is lost; someone wants to block a road being built in front of his house; someone wants a job; the requests come in torrents. Out of this dual role of acting as funnel for citizen complaints and requests, he gains a sense of government in action, gains insight into people and agencies."

As you look down from the House gallery, you will see your Representative following the day's program of business, likely the Special Order Calendar, checking against the file of printed bills nested beneath his desk, raising a question or participating in debate, and often called off the floor to confer with a constituent either in person in the lobby or on the telephone.

Before and after the daily session in the Chamber, the typical Member will be involved with the committees of which he is a member or committees considering bills he either has introduced or opposes. Back in his office, he again will return to the handling of mail, to answering the accumulated calls, to assigning staff to collect information.

But even then, as Abrams wrote, the day's work is not done although the lighted Capitol dome stands brightly against the night sky.

"A newsman may want to query him on one of his proposals; he may have to put the finishing touches on a news release, or face a barrage of TV lights while being asked to comment on some pressing issue. Then perhaps a walk to his hotel room to wash up before heading for a dinner meeting where he picks up gossip, exchanges views with his colleagues, puts in a good word for one of his bills, and then back to the hotel to read reports, memos, papers.

"Visit him in his own district and you may catch him in his law office or at night in his district office; again there is a procession of people seeking help and groups seeking support of their legislation. And perhaps dinner at a political or civic affair, possibly a speech, shaking hundreds of hands. It's no job for a recluse.

"To do his job well he needs a good sense of humor and a good sense of judgment. He learns to look for both sides of every story and not to make snap judgments. He becomes very close to his colleagues, regardless of party . . . He is generally neither an idealist nor a cynic but tends rather to be an establishment pragmatist. He is philosophic and tolerant in his understanding of human nature. He is proud of his position. He tends to be patriotic without being chauvinistic.

"He knows that he is part of history and making history."

DO YOU RECOGNIZE YOUR REPRESENTATIVES?

The chart printed at the centerfold of this pamphlet will help you spot the Representative or Representatives from your area in the Chamber.

Representatives are glad to welcome constituents. You will find their offices listed on a bulletin board next to the elevator just outside the Chamber of the House. If the Representatives are away from their offices because of the need to be in the Chamber or in committee, staff members will be glad to meet you and to assist you.

The bulletin board mentioned above, and an adjacent one listing committees and their places of meeting, show either "HB" or "C" after a room number. These refer to offices in the House Office Building or in the Capitol. The first numeral in room numbers indicates the floor.

BILL STATUS INFORMATION

If you are in either the Capitol or the House Office Building and have need for information on the status of specific bills, you will find two convenient sources, each tied into the legislative data processing system.

Bill status books, produced by the computer and reflecting the progress of legislation through the preceding day, are placed on tables outside each chamber.

There also are teletype machines available for public use in the corridors of the legislative floor of the Capitol and in the House Office Building. Each teletype has an information card explaining how it may be used.

THE LEGISLATIVE PACE

Committees formerly were appointed during the first days of a Regular Session. Usually they possessed no staff except a secretary to keep minutes. The session was well along before there was work product reported to the House for floor consideration by all Representatives.

Nowadays, committees are appointed shortly after a general election and have a two-year life span. They start work four or five months before the first of the two annual regular sessions. The number of committees has been reduced drastically. This means, in part, that a Representative likely will be reappointed to one or more committees on which he has served in prior terms and thus have continuing use for the expertise learned in various governmental fields. Technicians have been recruited and offices arranged so that committee chairmen and vice chairmen effectively may supervise staff activities.

The year-round functioning of committees means the House of Representatives can begin passing upon the work product through floor consideration from the first day of a regular session. In fact, the Committee on Rules and Calendar has been given the responsibility for selecting meaningful proposed legislation for deliberation on every day of every session.

STAFF

As suggested above, another significant aspect of the evolution of the Legislative as a true co-equal of the Executive has been the recruiting of staff. It was apparent a healthful balance between the Legislative and the Executive could be obtained only by matching the Executive with a staff equal in competence.

BILLS

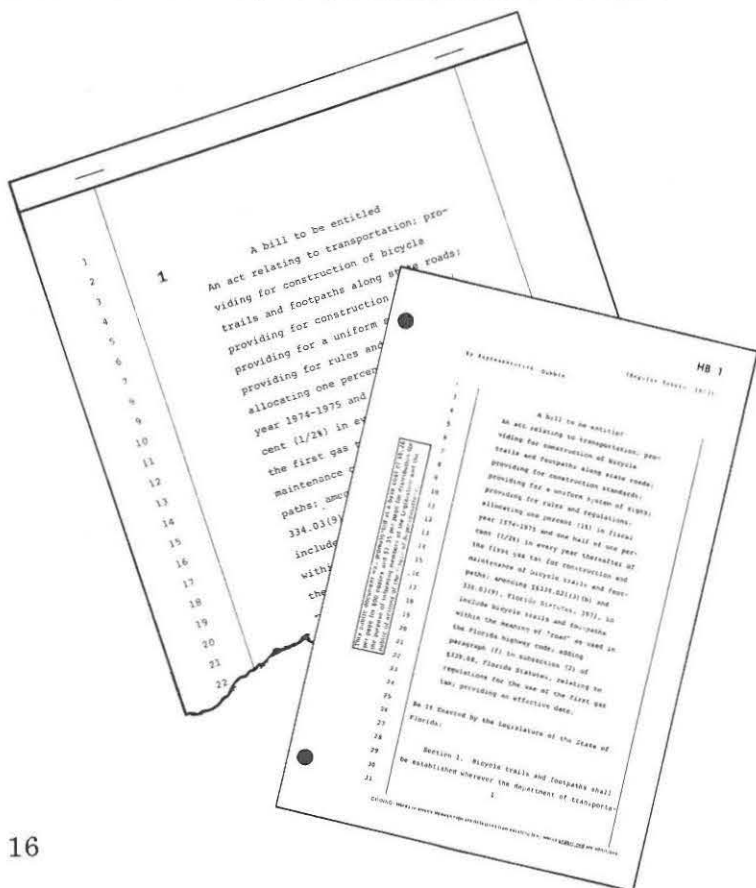

The word most commonly heard in the House is "bill." Every law was once a bill. A bill is simply a proposed law. It is the raw material that results from someone feeling "there ought to be a law."

Only legislators or committees of legislators can introduce bills. (Even the Governor, who has a Constitutional mandate to tell the Legislature what new laws are needed, must find a legislator to introduce his bills.) A legislator may introduce or co-introduce as many bills as he pleases.

A legislator may write his own bill, but chances are that someone else has done the actual drafting. Indeed, the House and Senate have divisions staffed with lawyers and clerks for this very purpose. Many others are drafted by committee staff directors and committee attorneys. The official bill drafters will take the ideas of legislators and put them in bill form.

A bill gains an identity of its own upon being introduced in one of the two legislative houses. Bills are serially numbered in the order of receipt.

LEGISLATIVE GRIST / a bill, in its original and printed form

Pending measures die with the expiration of a two-year legislature. Even though they may have been passed by either the House or the Senate, they must be reintroduced at a session of the next legislature and start the legislative process anew if sponsors feel the need still exists.

INTRODUCTION AND REFERENCE

A bill is introduced at the moment of the first reading of its title to the House.

It is then referred by the Speaker to one and, in some instances, another, of the standing committees. And the House, by vote, may send the bill to different or additional committees.

Reference has tremendous significance in the life of a bill.

An unfavorable report from a committee presents a barrier to the bill's passage which usually cannot be climbed. That is the most obvious importance of reference.

Time is perhaps the toughest foe of legislation, with every step a race against the clock and the calendar. Even a committee friendly to a bill's progress could offer amendments which might delay its progress just enough to cause trouble elsewhere in the legislative process. Or a committee may delay its progress overlong because of the press of other bills. With the session limited to 60 calendar days, each day's delay forces the bill into growing competition for time to be considered.

Reference can, therefore, be vital.

THE DAILY ORDER OF BUSINESS

If you are in the gallery from the time of the convening of the House in its daily session, you will find it following generally this Order of Business:

1. Roll call [taken on the roll call machine]
2. Prayer [usually by an invited clergyman or educator or a Representative]
3. Approval of the Journal [of the preceding legislative day]
4. Motions relating to committee references
5. Receiving of communications
6. Consideration of messages from the Senate [transmitting legislation originating in the Senate and passed there or reporting Senate action on House Bills]
7. Report of standing committees
8. Report of select committees [groups "selected" for special tasks]
9. Matters on reconsideration
10. Special Orders
 - (1) Regularly, Senate concurrent resolutions, memorials, general bills, and joint resolutions on Wednesdays for at least two hours
 - (2) Otherwise, as individually determined by the Committee on Rules and Calendar or by the House
11. Unfinished business
12. Consideration of bills and joint resolutions on third reading
13. Consideration of bills and joint resolutions on second reading

14. Consideration of House resolutions, concurrent resolutions, and memorials

15. Introduction and reference [of new legislation]

[Many items of business once publicly announced are no longer brought before the House but are reported in its Journal. Messages from the Governor advising the House of affirmative action on legislation originating in the House, for example, no longer are read, nor are committee reports which do not require House action.]

“READINGS”

Of the sentences spoken in the parliamentary ritual of the House, perhaps the most frequently heard is, “Mr. Speaker, I move that the Rules be waived . . .”

Those who hear this motion used again and again well may wonder why there are such rules if they are to be put aside. These rules are rather like the brakes on an automobile: to be used when it appears the vehicle is moving too fast. Their value lies in their presence rather than in their constant use.

Indeed, the rules sought to be waived are not of the House alone but requirements of the Constitution, which explicitly provides for their waiver under specified conditions.

The Constitution [Article III, Section 7] says:

“Any bill may originate in either house and after passage in one may be amended in the other. It shall be read in each house on three separate days, unless this rule is waived by two-thirds vote.

“On each reading, it shall be read by title only, unless one-third of the members present desire it read in full.”

There is materially less reason for the actual reading by the Clerk of the text of a bill to the House today than there once was. Every Representative has a printed copy of each general bill and an analysis of its contents by the House Bill Drafting Service.

“Reading,” therefore, has come to possess a symbolic sense of being a stage in the consideration of a bill.

If a Representative feels the House needs to slow down its consideration of a measure, or if a Representative in opposition believes a day’s delay may be helpful, he will oppose taking one or all of the Constitutional short-cuts. You will notice that it takes the approval of two-thirds of the Representatives present to use the short-cuts.

Incidentally, the custom of requiring three readings stretches back into legislative antiquity. It was a matter of practice in the English House of Commons by the 16th Century. Perhaps the specifying of three readings, instead of two or four, has its roots in the time when the number three first possessed religious significance.

Yet the custom does have practical value. A piece of legislation which has been brought up three times, perhaps on three separate days, in each of the two legislative houses has certainly come to the attention of many people.

“LAY ON THE TABLE”

The Clerk's table — a figurative piece of furniture — is the limbo of legislative matters.

To “lay on the table” means a bill or other matter has been removed from consideration and placed in suspense. A matter laid on the table can, by the prescribed number of votes, be resurrected and taken up from the table. It is not accurate, therefore, to say that a measure has been killed by tabling although the practical result is often that.

A bill unfavorably reported by a committee is automatically “laid on the table.” Upon the motion of any Representative, adopted by a two-thirds vote of the Representatives present, the bill may be taken from the table and placed on the Calendar.

“STRIKE THE ENACTING CLAUSE”

The Constitution leaves the form of bills to the Legislature. The size, the number of copies, and similar details are prescribed by Rule. But the Constitution does require the inclusion of one phrase for a bill to become law, and that vital language is:

“Be it enacted by the Legislature of the State of Florida.”

So, if you hear an amendment read which says “strike the enacting clause,” you may be sure this has been offered by a legislator unfriendly to the bill, as this amendment, if adopted, kills the bill.

RECONSIDERATION

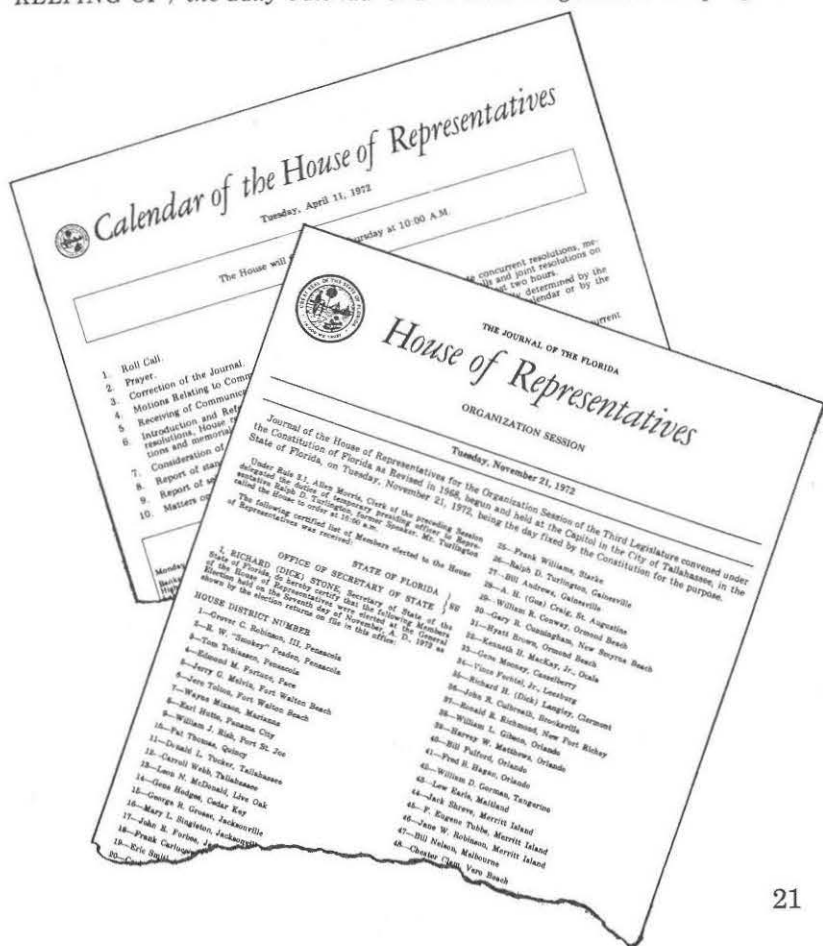

The House has at least two chances to pass upon any question presented for its vote. This is because every vote may be “reconsidered.”

A House-passed bill is delayed in its delivery to the Senate until the vote on passage has been reconsidered or a two-day period for this action has expired. (This does not apply to the last week of a session or to local bills.)

It is this delay that prompts a ritualistic exchange which often puzzles spectators.

A proponent of a measure will, just as soon as the bill has been passed by the House, often move for immediate reconsideration of the action which was to his liking, and still another proponent will ask that his motion be "laid upon the table." They are trying to hasten the bill's dispatch to the Senate since the motion for reconsideration can be made but once.

A MEMORABLE EXPERIENCE

Members of a new House take the Oath of Office from Chief Justice B. K. Roberts
November, 1972

“MOVE THE PREVIOUS QUESTION”

While every Representative theoretically has the right to be heard for at least 15 minutes on any question before the House, a motion for “the previous question,” if adopted by a majority, hastens the vote.

Traditionally, Speakers do not put this motion until both sides have had an opportunity to be heard for a reasonable time.

SPECIAL ORDER

The Committee on Rules and Calendar picks out bills for consideration each day ahead of others on the Calendar. This is known as a “Special Order.” The Committee gives the priority of “Special Order” to bills regarded as possessing more than ordinary significance.

COMPANION BILLS

Identical copies of some bills are introduced in both the House and Senate. The idea is to gain time by having the same measure, in two bills, moving simultaneously through both houses. These are known as companion bills.

The time is saved by reason of the fact that when the House reaches a committee-approved House bill on its Calendar, the Senate-passed companion bill may be substituted. Otherwise, the House bill would, if passed, have to go to the Senate, which already had considered and passed the identical measure. This would be a waste of time since the Senate would find it necessary to re-pass the text of its own bill.

ENGROSSING—ENROLLING

You may hear reference to engrossing and enrolling. Each means “to copy” but in a legislative sense the words are used to differentiate between two kinds of copying.

If changes are made in a bill during its consideration by the House, these changes—words added to or taken from the original bill—are made in the engrossed bill. An engrossed bill is one which has been amended, and this copy incorporates those changes.

Enrolling is the final handling of a bill in the Legislature. It has been passed by both houses, and now is enrolled, or copied, on permanent record paper, signed by the presiding and clerical officers of the Legislature, and sent to the Governor for his action and filing in the Office of the Secretary of State.

WHAT YOU SEE IN THE CHAMBER

You are seeing Florida's oldest lawmaking body in action when you look upon a session of the House of Representatives.

After Florida was acquired by the United States from Spain, Congress said 13 of the "most fit and discreet persons" in the new Territory should constitute its Legislative Council.

The members of the Legislative Council were first (beginning in 1822) appointed annually by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and then (beginning in 1826) elected by their fellow Floridians.

When Congress substituted a bicameral, or two-house, lawmaking system for the Territory, its Act of July 7, 1838, said "the House of Representatives shall be organized, and the members thereof shall be chosen as is now prescribed by law for the present Legislative Council."

Thus, it may reasonably be said that today's House of Representatives is the direct successor to the Legislative Council, which first gave the people of Florida a voice in the making of the laws governing them.

Interestingly, Congress provided in 1838 that the Legislative Council could have a maximum of 75 days a year to cope with the problems of fewer than 30,000 people. Today, with more than 6,000,000 Floridians, the Constitution provides the Legislature shall meet in regular session for 60 days every year.

REORGANIZATION

The House reorganizes at a special session convened for this purpose shortly after each general election. Reorganization means the newly elected Representatives select their Speaker, Speaker pro tempore, and Clerk and confirm the new Speaker's designation of a Sergeant at Arms for the two year life of the House. Rules also are adopted. The new Speaker then is fully vested with authority to appoint the committees. The committees will meet, prior to the legislative session, to consider matters within their subject field, including prefiled bills which have been referred to them by the Speaker.

PREFILING

"Prefiling" is a procedure by which House members may deliver proposed legislation to the Clerk ahead of the convening of the Legislature in regular session, allowing the Speaker to refer prefiled bills to a committee for pre-session study. Committees may take final action on a prefiled bill out-of-session. For that reason, committees are obligated to advise sponsors and other interested persons of their meetings for the consideration of specific bills. This enables both sides to be heard during the pre-session period.

THE INTERIM CALENDAR

So the public may know what legislation has been proposed, and what committees are studying, the Clerk periodically publishes an Interim Calendar when the Legislature is not in session.

The Interim Calendar lists all prefiled bills, by subject, sponsor, and the identifying number these will carry during their legislative life; the Speaker's references of the bills to committees, and notices of committee meetings, and reports of committees.

Anyone may be placed on the mailing list for the Interim Calendar by request to the Clerk, House of Representatives, The Capitol, Tallahassee 32304. There is no charge for this service.

ANYBODY CAN GET A BILL

All general legislation is printed, and a copy of any bill is available to the public upon request to the Sergeant at Arms, either in person or by mail.

COMMITTEE, OTHER ACTIVITIES

As a visitor to the gallery, you should keep in mind that you are seeing only the end product of the legislative process. The Chamber is the place where a vast amount of off-floor activity comes together.

The number of standing committees of the House varies from session to session. For the 1973 regular session, there are 20 standing committees. A standing committee is one appointed for the continuing consideration of bills within its jurisdiction. The name of the committee usually indicates this field of jurisdiction. A select committee is one selected to perform a specific task. There also are a number of other types of legislative committee, among these being Committee of the Whole House, conference, and joint.

COMMITTEES

Committees are organized by topic areas. Present standing committees in the House deal with these areas: Agriculture & Citrus, Appropriations, Business Regulation, Commerce, Community Affairs, Criminal Justice, Education, Elections, Environmental Protection, Finance & Taxation, General Legislation, Governmental Operations, Health & Rehabilitative Services, House Administration, Insurance, Judiciary, Natural Resources, Retirement, Personnel & Claims, Rules & Calendar, and Transportation.

The typical member of the House of Representatives will find himself involved in work from "can see" to "can't see"—from early in the morning until evening. Committee meetings are scheduled to minimize conflicts among committee members but a Representative with a bill to urge or oppose well may find himself confronted with a number of simultaneous meetings of House committees, Senate committees, or groups of constituents.

These meetings with constituents are often overlooked by those who think of the Legislature in broad, general terms. Each delegation inevitably will have frequent meetings with people from their home Districts, and these meetings must be scheduled to avoid conflict with meetings of House/Senate committees.

And, of course, the work goes on whether the Legislature is in session or not. Before a regular session, Representatives are obligated for an almost daily (or nightly) round of meetings with public and private groups, and with individual citizens, who have problems they want to talk over. There will be a round of scheduled meetings of standing committees beginning soon after the House's reorganization. State institutions will be visited by members of committees concerned with their financing and general management. After a session, the lawmakers will be reporting to their constituents, for so much occurs at every session that even the most attentive among newspaper readers, television viewers, and radio listeners cannot possibly know all that happened which may be of interest to them.

To repeat: as a visitor, you should keep in mind that what you see of activities on the floor of the House is but a fraction of the time and energy a Representative must put into his public task. The Clerk of the House had the opportunity to observe the Legislature closely as a governmental newsmen from December, 1939, until July, 1966, and he believes "the House is a hard-working, sincere, and dedicated body, deserving of your understanding, and worthy of your support."

THE CHAMBER

The House of Representatives first met in its present Chamber for the regular session of 1939. It is the same room but many changes have been made.

Originally, for example, the only ceiling lights were those of the chandeliers. The scene now is many times as bright as it was then.

Another change has been in the desks of the Representatives. Expansion of the House membership by reason of the 1963 apportionment necessitated replacement of the individual desks placed there in 1939. Fortunately, the providing of private offices for Representatives in 1961 meant the Chamber desks no longer need be as large as in prior sessions when Members had no other place to keep their belongings at the Capitol.

As you look about the Chamber from the gallery, your attention likely will be attracted first by the Speaker's rostrum and Clerk's table, fronting the desks of the Representatives and by the wall portraits. The portraits are those of former Speakers. Placing of the portraits began in 1959. They include all past Speakers living at that time.

Next, your attention may be drawn to the two big boards, with columns of names and the red (nay) and green (yea) lights, at the sides of the rostrum. These belong to the electric roll call system, and show how the individual Representatives have voted by pressing the yea-and-nay buttons on their desks. The original roll call system was installed for the 1939 session. It was enlarged for the 1963 regular session and further improvements incorporated for the 1971 session. The machine records, tabulates, and makes copies of the votes of Representatives with the speed of electricity. The electric roll call saves a very considerable amount of time in calling the roll for a legislative assembly of 120 members.

The two glassed-in booths on the back wall are provided for newsmen. Once the legislative correspondents occupied tables flanking the rostrum but growth of the corps of newsmen dictated the removal from the main floor. The booths, tied into the same public address system you hear in the gallery, make it possible for the newsmen to use typewriters, telephones, and voice recorders and to confer without distracting legislators.

FSU LIBRARY

1889 LEGISLATORS (and family of one) / facial foliage of an earlier era

In addition to the big, double doors opening at the rear of the Chamber upon the main, center aisle, you will observe doors on either side. The doors on the west side, or on the Speaker's right-hand, lead to Speaker's Offices (and those of other Representatives); east side, to the work rooms of the Clerk.

The electrical installation to be seen to the north end of the east gallery controls the public address system. The attendant energizes the desk microphones as members obtain recognition from the Speaker.

THE JOURNAL

The Clerk's Journal records only the formal parts of what has happened in the House and its committees. These include the titles of the bills introduced and considered and the way Representatives voted on the passage of bills.

Incidentally, a record roll call can be obtained on any question before the House whenever five Representatives, by raising their hands, ask for it. (There is a record roll call on the passage of every bill.) The traditional formula by which the Speaker declares the result of a voice vote allows time for this demand for a record vote: he first says, "the yeas appear to have it," then pauses and if five hands do not appear, goes on to declare, "the yeas have it."

Because the Clerk's Journal is not a verbatim, word-for-word record, the size in number of pages may on occasion bear an inverse ratio to the intensity of the floor debate. A day given over to argument on an important bill may require a few short entries. A day in which scores of local bills are passed necessitates page after page in the Journal although not a word of debate, in the sense of argument, has been spoken.

The Journal is of vital significance, for the courts look to the Journal for an accurate accounting of what formal steps were taken whenever a law is challenged on some ground of unconstitutional passage in its legislative course.

The Journal of each day's proceedings is distributed to Legislators and available to the public from the office of the Sergeant at Arms with the convening of the next legislative day's session. These daily Journals, after careful perusal for error, are drawn together and reprinted after sine die, or final, adjournment of the Legislature. This reprinting becomes the official record of what the House did. For the 1970 regular session, the Journal consisted of 1,439 pages.

The Journal distributed on Monday mornings attracts especial attention because it contains the names and affiliations of those persons who have registered as lobbyists during the preceding week.

CALENDAR

The Clerk also prepares the daily Calendar, a listing of the specific items of business which are available for House consideration. The Calendar also lists meetings of committees scheduled for that day. There also are Calendars of the legislation given priority by the Committee on Rules and Calendar and calendars of local legislation. Like the Journal, the Calendars in printed form are available to Legislators and the public on the morning of each legislative day. The public may obtain copies from the office of the Sergeant at Arms.

FSU LIBRARY

THE SPEAKER

The Speaker is the presiding officer of the House. All eyes will be on him during much of the time when the House is in session. (The presiding officer occupies the Chair, and this word stands for the office and not the furniture. This interchange of meaning stresses the impersonal approach of the presiding officer to his duties.)

The task of presiding will present a challenge to his stamina, for the Speaker will stand for hours; to his patience, for he will strive to allow contending forces to present their arguments properly; to his wisdom, for he will have to make vital decisions quickly and fairly; and to his wit, for he will need to know when and how to serve as a safety valve to release tensions with a quip.

Yet the Speaker must do more. While he can cast only one vote, equal to but not exceeding in value the 119 others, the Speaker usually possesses an intangible force which may be decisive should he choose to use this.

There is an aura of a mystical nature which surrounds the Chair. This can be demonstrated by the fact that never in a half century has an appeal been taken successfully from a ruling of the Chair. Certainly some of those rulings are open to question on the ground of judgment when viewed in hindsight. But the House has been willing to give one side or the other a momentary advantage rather than appear to question the good faith of the Speaker.

So, if he is wise, and Speakers generally are to have achieved this place of responsibility, he will not use this power recklessly or for unworthy purpose.

As a member, representing a District, the Speaker possesses the right to leave the Chair and speak in debate. Ordinarily, he will not do so unless some issue arises that seems to him of transcending importance to the State or the House. It is a solemn occasion when a Speaker ceremoniously vacates the Chair to come down to the floor for a speech.

While it is only lately that the dual nature of his role has become apparent in Florida, the Speaker is both the leader of the entire membership of the House and of those Representatives who belong to his political party.

The influence of the Speaker can be exerted in many directions. None is of greater importance than his power to appoint the members of House committees. He shares this power with no one. How he thinks well may flavor House committee thinking in many fields of proposed legislation.

If the Speaker is, say, conservative in his fiscal philosophy, he may appoint members to the Committee on Appropriations and to the Committee on Finance and Taxation who are of the same philosophy.

POLITICAL PARTY ORGANIZATION

With the emergence of the Republican party, a more formalized structure has developed in the House of Representatives than existed previously in this century when Representatives almost invariably were Democrats.

With the Democrats as the majority party, the officers are the Speaker, Speaker pro tempore, and Majority Floor Leader. The Speaker and the Speaker pro tempore are selected in caucus and then elected at the Organization Session. The Majority Floor Leader is chosen by the Speaker. With the Republicans as the minority party, the officers are the Minority Leader, the Minority Leader pro tempore, and the Minority Floor Leader. These are elected by the party in caucus.

Thus, each party has at least three officers with comparable responsibilities insofar as party obligations are concerned. They could be called the opposite numbers.

Incidentally, a caucus is a meeting of the members of a political party to determine the collective action, if any, they shall take on a pending matter. In the Florida House, there have been both public and private (or closed) caucuses, so no tradition yet has been established as to the nature of these meetings.

REPRESENTATION OF THE PEOPLE IN THE HOUSE

All Members of the House represent geographic Districts which had the same number of people at the time of the 1970 Federal census. The population of Florida in 1970 was 6,790,929. Divided by 120 Members, this set the perfect size of a House District at 56,591 persons. (The next apportionment scheduled under the Florida Constitution will occur in 1982.)

The House, in apportioning itself in 1972, followed a policy of providing multi-Member districts no larger than six in number for densely populated counties and single-Member districts for rural counties. Since the United States Supreme Court had approved the use of multi-Member districts in legislative apportionments stemming from the "one-man, one-vote" decision, many Floridians are represented by more than one House Member. A multi-Member group is based, however, upon multiples of 56,591. A five-Member group, for example, would have five Representatives elected from an area which in 1970 had 282,955 people.

The House embraces five six-Member districts, six five-Member districts, five four-Member districts, three three-Member districts, five two-Member districts, and twenty-one single-Member districts. The range of deviation from mathematical preciseness was from plus 20 per cent (114 people) to minus 10 per cent (57 people).

"District" has two meanings. A Member represents a numbered grouping for ballot purposes, and he also represents a geographical district which he may share with one or more other Representatives.

SEATING

Seating in the House Chamber is determined by the Speaker at each organization session although there is relatively little change from House to House except when a reapportionment occurs. Members from the same geographical districts generally are seated together.

Some areas are favored by members for different reasons. Those seated along the aisle in front of the rostrum may feel they enjoy some advantage in catching the Speaker's eye for the purpose of recognition. Other members prefer locations near the side exits to their private offices.

The Chairman of the Committee on Rules and Calendar occupies the first seat to the Speaker's left on the front row. This enables the Chairman to help the Speaker with the procedural motions which speed up the dispatch of the House's business.

Across the middle aisle, the first seat on the front row to the Speaker's right is reserved for the Speaker pro tempore, so he will be easily available to take a turn at presiding when the Speaker needs to be elsewhere. Whenever possible, the Majority Floor Leader, the Minority Leader, the Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the Chairman of the Committee on Finance and Taxation, and the Chairman of the Committee on House Administration are assigned double desks so they may confer more conveniently with Members during meetings of the House.

The desk microphones and the very considerable reduction of traffic in the Chamber have tended to diminish the disadvantages which were formerly attached to certain areas.

Until Representatives were provided with private offices in 1961, much of their outside legislative business was transacted at their chamber desks. This meant their secretaries and visitors often were by their side during meetings of the House, and the noise and the general movement of people were particularly disturbing to members who occupied seats on the fringe of the Chamber. Now, no one is permitted in the Chamber during sessions except Legislators and necessary employees. As a token of recognition of their rank, certain top officers of other departments of government are granted the "privilege of the floor", which means they may enter the Chamber while the House is meeting.

WELL OF THE HOUSE

The area, with reading stand, immediately in front of the center of the Clerk's table is known as the "well."

It is primarily used by Representatives who either wish to emphasize the importance of what they have to say or need to be in a position of facing the chamber to answer questions during the explanation of some measure. The Representative handling the General Appropriations Bill likely will use the facilities of the well.

Prior to installation of the desk microphones, the well was used far more frequently than now is the case.

JOINT SESSIONS, JOINT MEETINGS

The Constitution [Article IV, Section 1 (e)] provides, "The Governor shall by message at least once in each regular session inform the legislature concerning the condition of the state, propose such reorganization of the executive department as will promote efficiency and economy, and recommend measures in the public interest."

This annual message is given to the Legislature by the Governor in person (although Secretary of State R. A. Gray read the words of the ailing Governor Dan McCarty to the 1953 session) at a "joint session" held in the House chamber. If there are supplementary messages from the Governor during a session, he may deliver these in person or send them to the presiding officers for inclusion in the Journal.

The Legislature has "joint meetings" from time to time to hear addresses. Florida's United States Senators usually address the Legislature during a regular session. Persons of prominence visiting in Florida are occasionally heard. These have included Helen Keller, General Jonathan Wainwright, and astronauts. When the Legislature assembles for this purpose, it is convened properly in "joint meeting."

When the Governor responds to the mandate of the Constitution, the Legislature hears him in "joint session."

THE IMPORTANCE OF THE LEGISLATURE

Here in the Legislature, government by the people is made to work.

"All political power is inherent in the people," asserts the Declaration of Rights to Florida's Constitution. The Legislature is an instrument through which the people exercise that power.

For example, not a dollar of tax may be either collected or spent by the State government without an authorizing Act of the Legislature.

While no law may be passed without both the Senate and the House of Representatives agreeing upon its exact words, the House has traditionally felt a special sense of communication with the people.

This is because the members of the House are elected every two years. House members possess a grassroots nearness to the electorate which may not always be true of those officers of the State elected to four and six-year terms.

The House has the exclusive right to inquire into the conduct of those State officials of high rank who are not subject to suspension by the Governor. The House may vote articles of impeachment (for Senate trial) against the Governor, Cabinet officers, Justices of the Supreme Court, Judges of the District Courts of Appeal, and Circuit Judges.

To write your legislators during sessions . . .*

Representatives should be addressed as follows:

The Honorable
House of Representatives
The Capitol
Tallahassee, Florida 32304
Dear Representative

Senators should be addressed as follows:

Senator
The Capitol
Tallahassee, Florida 32304
Dear Senator

If you write . . .

It is suggested that you sign your name clearly and give your address correctly so the legislator can answer your letter.

Most matters coming before the Legislature are fairly well publicized in advance. To help your representatives, write them about issues prior to the Legislature taking action.

*For their mailing addresses out of session, see list of Members at the front of this booklet.
